Question: Your University announces a policy requiring all students to install a mobile app that tracks their class attendance, library visits, and time spent on campus. The administration argues that this will improve student discipline and academic performance. However, many students feel it violates their privacy and personal freedom. How can this issue be analyzed using different sociological perspectives— The Evolutionary Perspective, The Structural Functional Perspective, The Conflict Perspective, and The Symbolic Interactionist Perspective? Which sociological perspective do you personally find most convincing when applied to this scenario, and why?
